

Mental Health Resources for Coachella Valley Farmworkers

California is home to roughly one-third to half of all farmworkers in the United States. An estimated 15,000 farm workers reside in Riverside County, many of them working in the Coachella Valley. These workers put in long hours, for low wages, and estimates indicate up to 75% face the added challenge of being undocumented. Due in large part to these factors, farmworkers are particularly vulnerable to mental health challenges while simultaneously facing significant barriers to accessing care. And during the pandemic, these problems have become even more severe.

There is hope and help is available.

Making the decision to ask for help isn't always easy. Some people are afraid of a mental health diagnosis and what it may mean for their future. The good news is that recovery is not only possible, but probable. Still others may think that needing help will be seen as a sign of weakness. The truth is that recognizing a problem and seeking help is a sign of strength and courage, and it's the first and most important step on the road to recovery.

Experiencing mental health challenges can feel lonely, isolating, or hopeless at times. However, many people (1 in 5 adults in Riverside County) are living with mental health challenges. With appropriate treatment and support, 70–90% of people report a reduction in symptoms and improved quality of life.

There are tools that can help you get well, including medication, talk therapy, group support, self-directed wellness plans, and many other options. The sooner you reach out for support and find the tools that work best for you, the better your outcome is likely to be.
